SHORT STORY OF THE DAY ·0000000000 👁 00000000000

THE OTHER FELLOW.

From Black and White. Characters-Dick Hatherly, a young painter; Letty Lorimer, his second cousin, an orphan, and Captain Vere Grierson, a soldier on furlough. Scene I, No. 4 A St., Raphael's studios. Campden's hill-Rough sketches pinned on walls, finished pictures on easels; lay figure, with tam-o'-shanter rakishly a-top, posed on throne. Tray with plate of sand-wiches and empty beer bottle on plano. Under north skylight Hatherly in painting blouse, at work on six-foot-by-four canvas, time I brought it home in November till last week. If I'm not interrupted and get on as well as I've been doing, I may be in time for sendin-in day after all.

(Gentle knock at door, which Hatherly does not bear.)

rummoning up courage, she says, nervusly: "Dick."
Hatherly (starting)—"Yes. Why, I had searly forgotten you, Letty. By the by, what's come of the dowager? She doesn't usually allow you out alone."
Letty—"Grandmamma is tired to-day and sesting. I've been to the dressmaker's.
Ford is with me. She is waiting in the tarriage downstairs, I came up alone (faltering) because I wished to speak to you."
Hatherly (cheerfully)—"That's right.dear.
Gossip away. Tell me all your news. I can listen quite well, though I'm busy.
How's the old lady? Been any pleasanter lately?"
Letty (almost in tears)—"Oh, Dick, her

How's the old lady? Been any pleasanter lately?"

Letty (almost in tears)—"Oh, Dick, her temper is simply unbearable."

Hatherly—"Horrid old vixen! I'm glad she's no guardian of mine."

Letty—"I do try to be patient, but her tongue is so bitter and so cruel."

Hatherly (absently)—"Poor little giri!"

Letty (fervidly)—"Sometimes I feel as if I could run away."

Hatherly (engrossed in studying foreground of picture, soto voce)—"Ah, I've caught it now. Claxton was right. That shadow to the left is too heavy. What were you saying, Letty?"

Letty (getting it out with a jerk)—"Do you remember Captain Grierson, one of the Hatherity (squeezing fresh color on his palette)—"Yes, that alteration will make all the difference. I beg pardon, Letty. You were saying.—" all the difference. I beg pardon, Letty. You were saying—" Letty (patiently)—"Do you remember Captain Greirson?"

Hatherly—"Yes; he was at Rugby with me. Or was that his brother? Cecil Greirson—sandy-haired chap, tall."
Letty (hurriedly)—"Yes; Cecil Vere Grierson. I want to tell you, Dick—" (Hatherly, leaving his easel abruptly, goes to table and returns with small plece of cardboard with square cut from center, through which he gazes absorbedly at the new arrangement. Letty sighs despondently.)

Hatherly (turning to her)—"See, Letty!
Just look through this square a moment.
Don't you think the picture will compose better with that shadow lightened?" Letty (pale and agitated)—"Dick, I must go home; can't you spare me a moment today?"

Herberty (palestler)

day?"
Hatherly (penitently)—"Excuse me, dear. I'm beastly rude, treating you like this, it's the fault of this glorious light. There hasn't been a day like it all winter. I'm a boor, I know, but the fatal Monday draweth nigh after which no man can work."

Letty—"Weil, I was trying to tell you that Captain Grierson returns to India in two months to rejoin his regiment, and, and—"

Dick (cheerfully interrupting)—"Lucky beggar! seeing the world while we all vege-Letty (faltering)-"And-Dick-he says he hates going back. He doesn't wish to go alone."

Hatherly (struck by a sudden compunc-tion)—"I say, Letty, what a thoughtless brute I am not to have given you some tea. Just touch the bell, will you?"

Letty, "No tea thanks: I really couldn't tea. Just touch the bell, will your Letty—"No tea, thanks; I really couldn't drink it. Dick, he feels awfully at leavdrink it. Dick, he feels awfully at leaving—everybody—grandmamma keeps getting worse and worse, and—" Hatherly (painting away vigorously)—"She's an unmitigated old wretch. Good thing she was a bit queer to-day, so that you could get off the chain and have a little flutter by yourself."
Letty—"Oh, I don't think she would object to my coming here so much. She likes you pretty well, Dick. But to return to what we were saying—"
Hatherly—"Letty, Just reach me that hand mirror, will you? It's on the table beside you. Thank you."
Letty (continuing, doggedly and huskily)—"So he said he'd come this evening—for his answer."

Letty (continuing, doggedly and huskily)
his answer."

(Dick, staring fixedly at the reflection of his picture in the hand mirror, makes no reply. Letty waits in breathless silence.) Hatherly (speaking suddenly)—"Do come here, Letty, and say if you like that, or is it too strong?"
Letty (rising)—"It is strong and decided,
like yourself and all men. Dick, it is only
we women who are weak and irresolute, Good-by. No, don't come downstairs; I can see myself out. Good-by.

Hatherly (refleved)—"Well, if you must go, good-by. Come again soon, like a good girl, when I have more time to spare. And don't let the old lady bully you too much.
Ta-ta." (Hatherly paints till the light falls
and then sits before his picture, smoking, meditatively.) "Glad I took that hint of Claxton's. Funny how the duffers always give you the best suggestions. It will be easy sailing now. The rest groups all right. Nice of Letty not staying when she saw I was working against time. She did not seem so happy as usual, somehow.
Hatheril time she has with that old grandmother. If I was richer I'd like to carry her off out of the old witch's clutches, but she's too young yet. She was talking about Grierson. Capital fellow he used to be, Going back to India. What a lot of fun
those army chaps have—not like artists, shut up in a studio half the year, By the by, what was it Lety said about him not

"Autumn in the New Forest," afterward acquired by the Chantry bequest trustees. Hatherly (solliquizing)—"Well, I hope to goodness no one drops in this afternoon. There wasn't a day I could work from the time I brought it home in November till last week. If I'm not interrupted and get on as well as I've been doing, I may be in time for sendin-in day after all.

time for sendin-in day after all.

(Gentie knock at door, which Hatherly does not hear.)

Visitor—Tap, tap!

Hatherly (impatiently)—"Oh, bother! I'll pretend I'm out."

Visitor (louder)—Tap, tap!
Hatherly (rising muttering)—"Well, come in and be hanged to you, whoever you are."
(Opens door.) "Letty, by Jove!"
Letty Lorimer (hesitatingly)—"Yes, Dick. May I come in? You're sure I'm not disturbing you?"

Hatherly (mendaclously)—"Oh, no, of course, you're not. But I say, Letty, you won't mind my going on with my work, will you? I want to get this done for the academy, and time is short now."

Letty (earnestly)—"No, no, Dick!"
Hatherly (complacently)—"That's all right, then. Sit down there like a dear, and don't mind me. You see, the light is good how, and in a little while it will be too lark to paint."

Letty takes seat behind him and silently watches the progress of the work. At last, ummoning up courage, she says, nervously: "Dick."

Read what Dr. Northrop says:

"It is with sincere pleasure that I recommend the skill and workmanship of Dr. Merrick. His bridge work for me is a marvelous piece of mechanism; in fact I do not believe it can be excelled in any city by any dentist. He is also an expert in drawing teeth, having an invention of his own which bids fair to surpass any of the modern methods in that line without pain. No gas is used; the patient is perfectly conscious, yet there is no perceptible suffering from first to last.
